Go 8 Bit

Hello there.

As a mum of two, I know that parenting can often feel like an endless series of questions. Are they eating enough veg? Should they get more exercise? How can it take a human being that long to put on a pair of shoes?

Then there's the issue of what our children do with their spare time. It's tempting to fill up the hours with swimming lessons, ballet, football and so on, and all those things are great. But kids need a bit of downtime too just like the rest of us.

Of course, no one wants to see their child stuck in front of a screen all day. And it's important the games kids play are right for their age. But our children are growing up in a digital era, and video games are a great way to explore this new world.

Basically, it's all about moderation. In the same way ice cream is great as an occasional treat, video games can form part of a healthy balanced diet of entertainment - along with all that good stuff like reading, playing outdoors, and making weird space rockets out of old egg boxes.

Games have moved on a bit since we were kids, so this Parent's Guide is designed to explain how it all works.

The good news is it's easier than ever to make sure your children are safe online, and enjoying the right kind of games for their age group. Plus, it's not just about better graphics - these days, games offer a much wider range of play experiences, with more emphasis on creativity and exploration.

Most importantly, though, games are great fun.

And they're not just for kids - they are a brilliant way to come together as a family, share experiences, and have a laugh.

So why not give gaming a go?

BANG FOR YOUR BUCK

When it comes to working out the cost-per-hour of family entertainment, PlayStation offers fantastic value.

The fact is, buying a games console is a big decision. But this isn't one of those toys that will be gathering dust on Boxing Day and in the bin by Easter. It's a purchase the whole family will get value from, over a period of years.

There are loads of games available at different price points. And for £49.99 a year, you can get two titles every month as a PlayStation Plus member.

COUNTING THE COST

The average cost of a cinema ticket has risen by nearly 50% in the last ten years. Throw in the cost of popcorn and parking, and a family trip to the movies can cost up to £100, according to The Telegraph.

Alternatively, for less than three family visits to the cinema you can pick up a PS4 bundle and create an entertainment hub out of your living room for years to come.

PLAYING IT SAFE

Parental controls make it easy to keep an eye on what your children are playing and who they're playing with.

Video game companies want to keep your kids safe, just like you do.

So the PS4's parental control settings are designed to be as simple as possible to use.

Each family on PlayStation Network has a Family Manager, who can make any adult in the family a parent or guardian. Each parent or guardian can then customise parental controls for each individual child account.

Age ratings are just as important for games as they are for films. If you wouldn't let your child watch an 18-rated movie, they shouldn't be playing an 18-rated game.

TAKING CONTROL

Age ratings: You can set up the PS4 to play only games and movies that are rated below a certain age limit.

Internet access: You can tell the PS4 to block unsuitable websites - or you can disable the internet browser altogether.

Messaging: Disabling text and voice messages will prevent your kids from chatting to anyone online.

Money matters: Setting up a child account means there's no need to worry about big bills, because you can set a monthly spending limit. Plus, your kids will only be able to download content that's suitable for their age group.

THRILLS & SKILLS

Learning how to play is an important part of growing up. Games can teach us about creating and competing too.

There's no point pretending that playing video games will make your child a genius. Let's be honest, it won't even help them with their times tables. But games can teach us about working as a team, and coping with losing. Many of them encourage kids to use their imaginations to create brand new worlds. Plus, they send the message that you can get better at something through effort and practice.

Games aren't all about guns and cars. They are incredibly artistic both in storytelling and design, there is even a BAFTA Games Awards ceremony.

A NEW WAY TO PLAY

PlayLink is all about encouraging social gaming by bringing friends and family together around one telly.

You don't need to splash out on a load of extra controllers. This range of PlayStation exclusive games is controlled with your smartphone or tablet, connected to your PS4. Get the family together, download the free app and have some fun!

It's a quiz game, but there are no boring questions about oxbow lakes and the capital of Kazakhstan. That's You! is all about how well you know each other. Up to six players can get involved and there's also lots of fun to be had with touch-screen drawing and stupid selfies.

HIDDEN AGENDA

For when the kids have gone to bed, there's Hidden Agenda. It's just like a classic crime movie, except you get to decide how the story pans out. Work together with up to six friends to solve the mystery and get the killer banged up.

Who doesn't love a good gameshow? Up to six players can enter the fabled Pyramid of Knowledge, running from room to room as you try to work out who's the pharaoh of them all. It's not just about trivia, you can slow your opponents down with Power Plays and fun touch-screen challenges.

Karaoke! The entertainment form so beloved of small children and gigantic show-offs around the globe. Turn your smartphone into a personal, pocket-sized microphone and sing into your device to your heart's content, or until the neighbours call the police.

GOOD TIMES

Gaming is a great way to have fun as a family - whether you're competing against each other, working as a team, or just laughing at the grown-ups for being so rubbish.

TAKE YOUR PICK

From racing and football to cooking and LEGO®, there are loads of games that are perfect for playing together in the living room. Many allow up to four people to join in, playing either co-operatively or against each other.

If you can't get together in person, there are plenty of games that allow you to play and chat online. Parental controls keep things nice and safe.

MOVIES, MUSIC, & MORE

Whatever kind of entertainment you're into, PS4 has something to offer.

Why should kids have all the fun? Once they're tucked up in bed, release the stresses of the day with a quick match on FIFA or some escapism with Uncharted. PS4 also has a wide selection of movie, music, and telly apps. And check out PlayStation VR, because who wouldn't want to be lost in a virtual world instead of surrounded by old nappies and half-eaten fish fingers?

- Choose from millions of hours' of TV, film & music content.
- Create kids' accounts, so you can manage the kind of stuff they're watching.
- PS4's brilliant Suspend/Resume feature lets you pause your game to watch TV, switching between them seamlessly.
- Pretend you live on the Starship Enterprise by issuing voice commands to search your library and launch games.
